

Biography

Wolf Culture was born out of the seaside town of Bournemouth, England. After having played together in various projects before, Jay Dervan (Guitar) and Jake Daniels (Drums) decided to break away and create something of their own. With a vacancy at the front of the band, the duo pulled in the talents of Max Dervan, Jay's younger brother, and began writing together with Max providing both vocals and guitar to the band. Later, the line up was completed by Reece Collins on bass.

After performing and recording a series of demos and covers of popular artists, the band began picking up traction in the UK's South circuit under different aliases. However, in 2016, the band launched themselves into the scene under the moniker 'Wolf Culture'. This only cemented their footprint further into the UK stage, going on to share lineups with bands such as Boston Manor, WSTR, Hawthorne Heights, Trophy Eyes, Like Pacific, and The Dangerous Summer.

2018 was a big year for the band, seeing them release their debut EP entitled "The Devil's Plans For Idle Hands" under Common Ground Records. They rapidly gained a huge momentum within the British alternative music scene after the premiere of their single "Wreck" on Alternative Press. With the follow-up single "Continents" hitting their sound home with listeners across the globe after debuting on Punktastic. The four-track EP received glowing reviews. The band was featured in Rock Sound Magazine, in addition to 3 consecutive issues of Kerrang! Magazine and even being immortalized in the famous "Pandora" comic strip.

Wolf Culture have embarked on their first full-length UK tour with ROAM and Milestones, their first headline UK tour with label-mates SHADED and their first mainland Europe run with the Tonight Alive and Jamie Lenman.

2019 was an exciting year for WC; writing with the talented Alex Adams of ROAM and building a stockpile of new music. The band went on to record with the brilliant Neil Kennedy, at The Ranch Production House. Wolf Culture has become totally focussed on writing tracks that feel intensely personal, whilst keeping their signature bitter-sweet twist.

Now, in the midst of their highly anticipated 2020 sophomore release, Wolf Culture has released two brand new singles with their third upcoming single featuring Kellin Quinn of Sleeping With Sirens. Their new material promising to be harder, more truthful, and further from your comfort zones than ever before.
